

Man AHL Diversified (AUD) retraced -1.55% in December.

The month started positively with news that six of the world's major central banks were to inject new liquidity into the financial system. The Euro crisis, however, was never far from investor's minds as credit agencies warned of credit downgrades for a number of Eurozone nations.

Short positioning across a basket of stock indices contributed to the bulk of losses as global equities enjoyed a modest uptick towards the end of the month. The traditional 'Christmas rally' was helped by positive news in the form of German economic data and a better than expected Spanish bond auction.

Currency trading ended the month in positive territory as short euro positions, against AUD, GBP and CAD profited from the steady decline in the euro. Long positions in USD detracted slightly from returns as the perceived 'safe haven' currency fell marginally out of favor.

Bonds trading generated flat returns. Long holdings in both German and UK bonds made profits as they continued to attract safe haven inflows due to debt problems in the rest of Europe. Profits were trimmed by losses from long holdings in US Treasuries.

Metals trading produced mixed returns. Profits from short platinum and silver trades were offset by losses from long gold and short nickel positions.
